Customer Reviews

Having this book-manual by Fabricant, Miller, & Stark available in any career counseling center will provide the reader-user with a thorough, well-organized path to establishing career goals, objectives, and plans of action. For someone âin betweenâ or someone hoping to change direction, Creating Career Success effectively has a self-paced design that leads the reader-user to personal skills, preferences, and values. From that point, the career seeker or career changer can craft a tailor-made plan of action for the next steps. The beauty of this book lies in its focus. Not only do the authors provide information, they make it come alive. They use case studies. They have lists, task check sheets, and calendars in abundance. And, what really impresses is the heavy incorporation of 21st century technology-driven tools, tips, and strategies to succeed in the job markets driven only by online contact. Overall, this book-manual should be a leading volume in public or private collections. Donât miss your copy!

As a career development course instructor and career counselor, I love this textbook! It is a great resource for students who are exploring careers and are undergoing the self-exploration process to uncover their top skills, interests and values to understand how those translate into a viable career. It is only once individuals know this about themselves, can they then create successful career documents. Anyone can write a resume but if that resume doesn't highlight the candidates top strengths and also align with the strengths required to be successful in that particular industry, will the resume and candidate get very far. I also love the interactive nature of the text because career development is not something you can simply read about but it is a process and this text takes you through that process in an organized and engaging way. I look forward to using this text in future courses I teach on this topic!

It is an excellent book for a career exploration class (and I have used it for several years).

Great price .Thanks .
